The course is split into two different weeks (in April and in May). It focuses on two different topics: criminal justice and national security in the U.S. The aim of the course is to give a hint of the present problems and questions in the American debate about criminal justice and national security, with a particular attention to questions related to the new policy of the federal administration about immigration and terrorism.

Joseph Margulies is Professor of Law and Government at the Cornell University Law School (Ithaca, NY, U.S.A.). He is also a criminal defense and civil rights attorney. For many years, he has defended people caught up in the excesses of the national security state and the criminal justice system. He was Counsel of Record in Rasul v. Bush (2004), involving detentions at the Guantánamo Bay Naval Station, and in Geren v. Omar & Munaf v. Geren (2008), involving detentions at Camp Cropper in Iraq. Presently he represents Abu Zubaydah, who was held in CIA black sites and whose interrogation in 2002 and 2003 prompted the Bush Administration to draft the infamous "torture memos."
