TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Spring semester 2021 - Seminar Ethics and Economics/ University of Zurich/ Zurich/ Switzerland
Guest lecturer during the MA seminar run by Prof. Catherine Herfeld; 2 teaching hours. I discussed with students my article 'Values in economics. A recent revival with a twist' published in the Journal of Economic Methodology in 2021. The article was assigned as a main reading.

Autumn semester 2019 – Lecture Selected Topics in Philosophy of Economics/University of Turku/ Turku/ Finland

Guest lecturer, co-teaching PhD students in the social sciences with Dr. Luis Mireles-Flores, within a lecture series Eight Lectures in Philosophy of Science; 3 teaching hours. The lecture introduced students to the most important contemporary discussions in the philosophy of economics (on the positive-normative divide, modelling, causality, normative economics, values in economic science). Language of the course: English.

Autumn semester 2017 – Course Philosophy of the Social Sciences/ University of Helsinki/ Helsinki/ Finland

Lecturer, co-teaching with Dr Samuli Reijula the course offered to undergraduate students, open to international students; 30 teaching hours. The course introduced students to the basic topics and approaches in the philosophy of the social sciences and provided an overview of the main debates on interpretation, causality and explanation; rationality, action and agency; individualism and holism; institutions and social norms; methods of scientific inference; values and objectivity. The objective of the course was to make students understand and argue about questions pertaining to the nature of social reality, conceptualization of social behaviour and action, and principles of knowledge formation in the social sciences. Language of the course: English.

Spring semester 2017 – Course Philosophy of the Social Sciences/ University of Helsinki/ Helsinki/ Finland

Lecturer, co-teaching with Dr Caterina Marchionni the course offered to undergraduate students, open to international students; 30 teaching hours. The course introduced students to the basic topics and approaches in the philosophy of the social sciences. The course ended with a written exam. Three assignments (individual essay, report submitted after group work and a poster presentation) were part of the overall score. Language of the course: English.

May 2014 - Course Law and the behavioural sciences/ Humboldt University/ Berlin/ Germany

Lecturer teaching two classes for undergraduate students during a teaching exchange week; 10 teaching hours. The course offered students an overview of the main applications of the behavioural sciences to law contexts and philosophical questions they provoke. Lecturing on the topic was complemented by warm-up examples and group work. The students, as well as educators from the LSE, present in the room, gave me oral and written feedback after the class. Language of the course: English.

March 2014 – Seminar meeting Methodological issues in law & economics/European University Institute/ Florence/Italy

Lecturer invited to teach a class during the course for PhD students Economic analysis of law; 3 teaching hours. The lecture aimed at introducing PhD students to the epistemological and philosophy of science perspectives on the economic analysis of law. Part of the seminar meeting was a semi-structured discussion on the seminal and controversial article by Michael Friedman The methodology of positive economics. Language of the course: English.

June 2011 – Seminar meeting Risk regulation. Perspectives. Economic analysis. Examples/ Warsaw School of Economics/ Warsaw/ Poland

Lecturer invited to teach one class during the seminar on economic analysis of public law for LL.M. students; 2 teaching hours. The seminar meeting concerned different insights from the social sciences on the analysis of risk and on how they can complement the economic approach to risk regulation. Language of the course: English.

Autumn semesters 2011 & 2012 – Course Decision making and public policy/Collegium Civitas/ Warsaw/ Poland

Lecturer running a seminar for master students, based on my own syllabus and aimed at reviewing the recent research in the area of decision theory and its importance for public policy making; 30 teaching hours. The theoretical insights were presented with special focus on their practical implementation to policy analysis and decision-making. Students were invited to focus on selected contemporary debates on policy issues, such as discussions about environmental transformations, risk regulation, paternalism and nudging. Grading was based on the term paper which included students' analysis of a selected policy issue. Language of the course: English.

October 2006 – February 2008 – Course Logic for lawyers/ Adam Mickiewicz University/ Poznań/ Poland

Teaching assistant during both autumn and spring semesters throughout the above-mentioned period. I taught several groups of undergraduate students each year, 30 teaching hours per each group. The aim of the course was to prepare law students to the exam in logic. The course consisted of the theoretical introduction to the basics of logic (propositional logic, predicate logic, set theory, logical fallacies, theory of argumentation), as well as exercises aimed at testing students' comprehension of the concepts. Language of the course: Polish.
